COURSE SYLLABUS

Required text: KATHLEEN M. SULLIVAN & GERALD GUNTHER, CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (Foundation Press 17th edition 2010).*

In addition to the Sullivan & Gunther book, there are a number of additional or replacement readings that are posted on Blackboard as .pdf files.

This course concerns how the Constitution of the United States sets up the structure of government in three distinct ways: “Horizontal” (among the three branches of the federal government); “Vertical” (allocation of power between the federal government and state governments); and “Individual” (rights of individuals vis-à-vis the government). The principal vehicle for our examination will be more than 200 years of Supreme Court opinions, starting with Marbury v. Madison in 1803. As a result, for most of the course, the issue is less an underlying normative one of whether the Constitution has set up the “right” structure, but, rather, the positive one of filling out the implications of the structure that the Constitution has, indeed, set up. But in that examination, it is essential to develop a sense of how well the Supreme Court is doing in explaining its outcomes in terms of the Constitution.

In the cases we will read, the Court is invariably construing the Constitution of the United States, either specific provisions or authority and limitations arising out of what the Court perceives to be the underlying structure embodied in the Constitution. In every case, you should make the effort to determine which provision is (or provisions are) involved and read the provision(s) carefully for yourself—the syllabus that follows does not “assign” specific provisions of the Constitution, but it is the foundation of everything we will do in the course. The Constitution is reprinted in Sullivan & Gunther following p. 1395. I am also posting a .pdf file containing the Constitution, as I find it useful to have it open alongside any particular opinion, without needing to flip back and forth in the Sullivan & Gunther book.

* The 16th edition (2007) is a workable alternative, with the “page translation” sheet; earlier editions are not.
