

In Review

A photograph capturing a celebratory moment at a graduation ceremony. In the foreground, several graduates in black gowns and caps are visible. One woman on the left is cheering with her mouth wide open and her right arm raised. Next to her, a man in a black gown and cap is smiling. To his right, another woman is smiling broadly. They are surrounded by a shower of colorful confetti falling from the sky. The background shows lush green trees and a clear blue sky. The overall atmosphere is one of joy and accomplishment.

COMMENCEMENT 2014

Class Cheer

CELEBRATION SCENE: Members of the Class of 2014 celebrate on the Eastman Quadrangle after receiving their degrees during this spring's ceremony for Arts, Sciences & Engineering. Reminding students that life is not always a straight path, MSNBC political analyst Chris Matthews told graduates, "If you don't have a clear hunch about what you want and how to match it with reality, it may come to you later if you find a way to give it a chance." More than 3,000 degrees were conferred during three days of ceremonies this spring.

PHOTOGRAPH BY KEITH WALTERS FOR ROCHESTER REVIEW