What to expect?

Knowledge produced through research is essential to improving educational quality in underperforming schools. But it's time to move from studying the issues to addressing what's impacting P-12 schools today. A panel of statewide and national educational leaders will share their expertise about collaborative efforts, policy changes, and local- and state-level support necessary to transform K-12 schools into sustained systems where students thrive.

This free event is sponsored by the Warner School of Education's Center for Urban Education Success
